To Whom It May Concern,

I am writing this letter with regards to the advertisement for the Software Engineer Intern position at TradeStation. I am highly motivated to be a part of your dynamic team at TradeStation, having a very solid base of software engineering principles and successful experience in full-stack development.

I am exposed to strong academic and professional exposure, which made me perform well in various programming languages, including C++, Java, Python, and JavaScript. Projects such as creating a cross-platform messaging app and a dynamic content management system for my blog truly strengthened my ability in applying skills and knowledge of technology to come up with software solutions that would be impactful.

The chance to work for TradeStation is particularly attractive, given the dedication of the firm toward innovation in sharing its mission with the investing society. I am assured that with a strong background in software development and a congenial interest in finance and technology, I will do great as a very worthy team player for your firm.

Graduated with a 3.86 GPA, I successfully completed my Associate in Computer Science at Broward College. Currently, I am studying for my Bachelor of Science in Computer Science at the University of Central Florida, where I have excelled academically and held leadership in related clubs within the facility. These backgrounds bring with them the technical skills and collaboratory experience required to succeed in a fast-paced, innovative environment, such as TradeStation.

Thanks for considering my application. I am very interested in discussing how my background, skills, and enthusiasm for your team's needs could make a good match. I would be more than thrilled to be a part of your projects and learn from the best at TradeStation.

Sincerely,
Yauheni Khvashcheuski (Eugene Chevski)
